Living the Future: Digital Repositories & Large Data Sets
The sea change from paper to digital is well underway. We begin the creative process in a digital form on a word processor, digital camera, or computer sensor. Increasingly, the distribution medium is digital and paper an afterthought or simply unavailable. Libraries have centuries of experience dealing with paper and just a few decades at best of curating and providing digital content. How is National Agricultural Library (NAL) approaching these challenges? What digital repository activities is NAL undertaking? How will NAL cope with the coming wave of large data sets produced by USDA scientists?
- Christopher D. Cole, Associate Director for Technical Services, National Agricultural Library

2:15   National Library of Education ERIC Update
